The Brazilian actress and multimedia star, who has 28 million Instagram followers, stars as a superstar influencer similar to when John Malkovich was cast as John Malkovich. So, the movie is like a layer. It's rom-com for the social media age, but is your favorite selfie angle enough to differentiate you from the usual genre trophies? Airplane Mode: Stream it or skip it? Gist: Ana (Manoela) is a super-esthy. She wakes up, takes a shower, does her hair and makeup, and returns to bed for a photogrammed video. As she walked out the door, her mother (Sylvia Lorencio) didn't forget the morning! Ana rushes back to take a picture. Priority! Ana has a lucrative contract with True Fashion, a high-performance design firm run by the ruthlessly bumped Carola (Katusia Canoro), and she has set up a prize pet (she has reclaimed the fanny alone). Photo They developed their relationship to the full potential with their perfect quasi-boyfriend, Gil (Eike Duarte). As in social media engagements, wedding engagements, DUH, fake offers are inevitable, but ready to get blillion (yes, more billion than bajillion) likes, and rapid sales of their original, but potentially lucrative new fashion lines. But Ana has a problem. Her car is dented and dented by many accidents, dinging from all the products of her cell phone obsession, and scratching. Screech, crisis: She pulls, takes a pouty facial selfie next to her latest party East Sea don battle scar, repeats. As you think to yourself, it's only a matter of time -ti- she goes into a serious accident and completes the thought. She's fine, but while she's recovering in the same hospital with two small bruises, her parents hired the actor to postpone the lawsuit, saying she had too many distracted driving accidents. She is sentenced to live and go live with her grandfather (Erasmo Carlos) in the country, 70 qualities in the nearest cell tower and a place where she can carry out numerous plot developments set up by screenwriter bots, including but not limited to: treating herself of social media addiction, curing herself of social media addiction, and resolving the broken relationship between Gramms and her dad (Michelle Berkovic), using her new-bred authenticity to design clothes and use her new-bred authenticity to non-Frare.. Will all this happen or will it exceed our expectations? Ruining it I wouldn't: Arlene Arruda/Netflix Which movie will remind you?: This is the kind of stuff Reese Witherspoon used to do in her can: fish-out-of-water, a city girl comedy that inevitably puts international types into horses or piggens (or in this case, under vintage muscle cars with oil flowing down her eyes) to teach a light lesson in humility and realize that cowboy boots are cool, sturdy, rugged homelins hott. Airplane mode intersects with any movie with a hashtag and the sweet home Alabama title. Watching the performance worth watching: everyone in this film is salt without salt: thin, brittle, monotonous, characterless. Cano says millennials understand sarcasm, and I think it makes pretty good hay of comic villain lines like Speak Fluent Millennials. Memorable conversation: Knowing yourself is the first step in self-loathing. Says Carola, and I think Werner Herzog movies can talk about all these movies. Sex and skin: No heavier than PG-rated smoaking. Our take: Hey, the kind of influencers so undermined by framing the world of influence as a constantly artificial place populated by people you know, movie types of non-life, as well as backstabbing dinks, self-related and soft-headed pox? I do not know. Airplane mode is sloppy, formal, feels good, and deep as a puddle. Patagonia's arid undertones. All plot points here are predictable: when Ana arrives in small-town Brazil (the scenario is not interested in any kind of detail, including character traits), the city slick fools and hay seed yeehaws all pre-judged; At the local general store, Hunky Pella helps us meet our expectations of what happens to the two most attractive people in the film. Ana and Gramms are beging for their marginalized relationship by maintaining a bond over the repairs of the aforementioned muscle cars and the secrets of their grandmother. Will half of the second act consist of montages, etc., etc.? Will the fashion idiots of the first act get their splendor turned into a third? Will Ana ditch trendy dingbart outfits for jeans and oversized belt buckles? I said I wouldn't spoil it, but honestly the movie is ruining itself for the first 20 minutes when it starts to telegram future plot points in many many leagues. Our call: skip it. Hashtag boredom, hashtags, hashtag derivations, hashtag eye rolls, hashtag contemporary LEGO are old formulas, hashtag hashtags.
